Here are a few highlights of what speakers had to say from the Federal Reserve's REO (Real Estate Owned by banks) summit as they sought to get a handle on solving our housing crisis. The summit focused on community strategies to cope with mounting foreclosures and the negative impact they have on neighborhoods.

Mark Zandi, chief economist, Moody's: "There have been four waves of foreclosures. Wave No. 1 was in 2006. Those were the flippers. When the market began to turn and it became clear they couldn't make a quick buck they turned the keys back to their lenders. Wave No. 2 was 2007, that was the subprime reset problem. ... Wave No. 3 began in late '07 and early '08. This is the combination of negative equity and unemployment or underemployment. We are now entering into wave No. 4, that's what is being called strategically default. The idea being that homeowners under reasonable assumptions can make their mortgage payments but find it financially unpalatable. Those are the people who are deeply underwater by more than 20%. ... The best estimates I've seen is that 20% of defaults are now strategic. And it is rising. The foreclosure problem is still in full swing. It will translate and will continue to translate into more REO.

I could continue this string; its what most of us hear in the media. There is however another side to the real estate market. It's the old fashion way where responsible people sell to other responsible people. These are the folks who maintain their homes/investments and offer a better value. I have seen short sales and REOs sell for $100,000 or more less than an owner/occupied well maintained home. Most agents will say your property is only worth "X" and here are what has sold to prove it. Not so fast, that is not always the whole story. Some people do get more because their property is worth more.

I sell both segments of the real estate industry. My company is divided into two parts. One group sells REO and Short Sales while the other sells equity based properties; resale's. We have three offices locally and our sales are reported independently. I decided to have two MLS numbers so one shows distressed properties and the other markets properties like the ones owned by people receiving this newsletter. I mention this because you may never see me ranked number one even if I have more business than the person or company that is. I don't consolidate to stroke my ego, I don't claim my agents business under my name, I do what's in my client's best interest...always have an always will. My motto; "Do what's right, then do it again.”

Currently the REO (bank owned) and Short Sale market is in a state of flux. It seems the Florida attorney's responsible for 80% of foreclosures have been stating that all paperwork is in place to foreclose. The banks have signed off only to discover the attorney's have not done their jobs. This means 1,000s of listing were not properly foreclosed and can't be sold. This means there is a possibility a short term shortage of properties could occur leading to higher prices until this mess is cleared up in 3-4 months. At that time the market will be flooded with REO listings forcing prices down. Sells in our market are running 16% REO, 17% Short Sales and 67% standard real estate transactions.

Currently we have 1,861 waterfront condos listed representing a 15 month supply. We have 549 waterfront home listed representing a 19.4 month supply. I personally have 200+ listings representing a 5.7 month supply.

As readers, you are owners of high priced properties and your buyer(s) are likely to be from another country. That is why Internet dominance is so important. In addition to the normal websites all real estate offices post their listings on we have 141 websites plus 26 REO websites that draw traffic to our listings. The week of Oct 3, 2010 I was interview for Inman News and NPR.
